

Building muscle at home, in 90 days

No machines, no excuses. The same method, with what you already have.

Training at home is not the poor version of a gym, it is the version that asks more of your head. With no machines choosing the path for you, technique, time under tension and progression become everything. This guide shows how to run the same method with your bodyweight and, if you have them, a pair of dumbbells or a band.

- 01 The 3 principles that actually build muscle
- 02 The 5 day home plan, exercise by exercise
- 03 How to progress when you cannot add plates
- 04 Nutrition guidance and the mistakes to avoid

The 3 principles that build muscle

01 Mechanical tension, the only engine that matters

Muscle grows when it is forced to produce force against resistance. Not soreness, not exhaustion, tension on the fibre. The eccentric, a controlled 2 to 3 second descent, is where that tension peaks. Never waste it.

02 Progressive overload, beating last week

If you did 8 reps, next week the target is 9, or the same 8 with more load. No progression, no growth. Log your sessions: what is not measured does not improve.

03 Recovery, where muscle is actually built

Training is the stimulus, growth happens in the rest. Seven to eight hours of sleep is the cheapest anabolic there is. A lighter week every fourth week is not weakness, it is planning.

THE PART MOST PEOPLE IGNORE

You do not fail for lack of effort, you fail by changing programme every three weeks. Pick a method, run it for 90 days, judge it after. Consistency beats perfection, every time.

The training plan, 5 days at home

The same movement patterns as the gym, with what exists in a living room. It is the same plan the app builds for you, fitted to your days and your equipment.

3-4

sets per exercise

6-12

reps on compounds

10-20

Nutrition, general principles

The following is general educational information and does not replace professional nutrition advice. For a personalised meal plan, speak to a registered nutritionist.

A moderate calorie surplus

To grow, eat slightly above your daily expenditure, around 200 to 300 kcal. Gaining 0.5 to 1 kg a month means you are on track.

Protein, the foundation

The research points to 1.6 to 2 g per kg of bodyweight per day. At 70 kg that is 112 to 140 g a day.

Carbohydrates, your fuel

They are the main energy source for hard training. Rice, potato, oats, pasta. Do not cut them if you want to grow.

Consistency above all

There is no perfect diet, there is a good diet done consistently. One meal off plan does not undo a week of work.

The mistakes holding you back

✗ Thinking it cannot work without machines

It works, as long as the set ends close to failure. Load is only one way to create tension.

✗ Doing the same reps forever

When you cannot add weight, progress something else: more reps, slower tempo, less support, more range.

✗ Training without logging

At home it is even easier to drift. Write down what you did, even if it is in your phone.

✗ Underrating sleep and food

The stimulus at home can be enough. If you do not sleep or eat, you do not grow, and the equipment is not to blame.

What changes if you subscribe

This guide is the method. You can run it alone and it works, if you stay consistent. Once the 7 days are up, the app on its own is €35 a month and keeps building and refreshing your training. What 1:1 coaching adds, at €127, is the part almost nobody manages to do for themselves.

FREE: THIS GUIDE AND THE TRIAL

- This plan, the same one for everyone who trains where you train
